The Chicago-Times-Herald prints a column story telling how Clay Clement became one of the finest swordsmen on the stage. Years ago when Daniel Bandmann, the tragedian, a fierce and enthusiastic swordsman, gave Clement an engagement, he gave him $25 to take 25 lessons in swordsmanship, and said keep it up until you learn. Clement took $150 worth of lessons and the bill took Bandmann's breath. The first time they played Richard III, Richmond (Clement) gave Gloster (Bandmann) such a magnificent fight with the sword, Bandmann hugged Clement for joy. "It cost $150 dollars to teach you, but it was worth it."
